

British Garden Centres showcases two new plants at BBC Gardeners' World Live

British Garden Centres are showcasing two new plants this week at BBC Gardeners' World Live in Birmingham. The new Delphinium and Buddleja have been sourced for this event and will be the stars of the event for the group.

Julian Palphramand, Group Plant Buyer, said "I am excited to bring these two new plants to the show as they add to our collection of butterfly-themed plants – all inspired by our new logo".

Buddleja Butterfly Candy is pollinator friendly and blooms in an intense Candy pink, red colour. It is compact and bushy and makes the perfect patio plant. It is also available in a variety of colours, that will make any garden pop with colour.

The stunning and unique new Delphinium Red Lark is a free flowering semi-double light redorange flower. It has multiple flower shoots, and although shorter in height than a typical delphinium it is stronger than most.

In May at the RHS Chelsea Flower Show, the group launched the brand-new Hydrangea Red Butterfly, these two new plants join the Hydrangea in becoming key plants reflecting the group's passion for plants.
